comes to open it. She is rude to Pumblechook and sends him away when she takes Pip inside. She leads him through the ornate, dark mansion to Miss Havisham candlelit room. where the skeletal old woman waits by her mirror, wearing a faded wedding dress, surrounded by clocks stopped at twenty minutes to nine. The girl leaves, and Miss Havisham orders Pip to play. He tells her earnestly that he is too affected by the novelty and grandeur of the house to play. Miss Havisham forces him to call for the girl whose name is Estella. Estella returns, and Miss Havisham orders her to play cards with Pip. Estella is cold and insulting, criticizing Pip's low social class and his unrefined manners. Miss Havisham is morbidly delighted to see that Pip is none the less taken with the girl. Pip cries when he leaves

After a long hunt, the two convicts are discovered together, fighting furiously with one another in the marsh. Cornered and captured, Pip's convict protects Pip by claiming to have stolen the food and file himself. The convict is taken to a prison.

Joe carries Pip home and they finish their Christmas dinner. Pip goes to bed while Joe narrates the scene of the capture to Mrs Joe and the guests. Pip continues to feel guilty about the incident. After the incident, some time passes. Pip lives with his guilty secret and struggles to learn reading and writing at Mrs Wopsle's school. At school, Pip befriends Biddy, the grand daughter of the teacher. One day, Joe and Pip sit talking; the illiterate Joe admires a piece of writing Pip has just done. Suddenly Mrs. Joe bursts in with Pumblechook. Highly self satisfied, they revealed that Pumblechook has arranged for Pip to go and play at the house of Miss Havisham, a rich spinster who lives nearby. Mrs Joe and Pumblechook hope she will make Pip's fortune, and they plan to send him home with Pumblechook before he goes to Miss Havisham the next day. The boy is given a rough bath, dressed in his shirt and taken away by Pumblechook.

Over breakfast, the next morning, Pumblechook sternly grills Pip on multiplication problems. At, he is taken to Miss Havisham's manor, Satis House. The gate is locked, and a small very beautiful girl who tries to strike Pip and then flees. When Pip finally comes upon his original tormentor, he finds him suffering cold, wet and hungry. Pip is kind to the man but the convict becomes violent again when Pip mentions the other escapee he encountered in the marsh, as though the news troubles him greatly. As the convict scrapes at his leg irons with the file, Pip slips away through the mist and returns home.

Pip is overwhelmed by helping the convict. He feels guilty himself. He even expects to find a policeman waiting for him at Joe's house. When Pip slips into the house, he finds no policemen, only Mrs Joe busy in the kitchen cooking Christmas dinner. Pip eats breakfast alone with Joe. The two go to church.

Mrs Joe stays at home. Christmas dinner is an agonizing affair for Pip who is crowded in a corner of the table by his well-to-do uncle Pumblechook and the church clerk, Mr Wopsle. Terrified that his sneaking out of the house to help the convict will be discovered. Pip nearly panics when Pumblechook asks for the brandy and finds the bottle filled with tar water. His panic increases when suddenly several police officers burst into the house with a pair of handcuffs.

Pip is sure the policemen have come to arrest him, but all they want is for Joe to fix their handcuffs. The bumbling policemen tell Pip and Joe that they are searching for a pair of escaped convicts, and the two agree to participate in the manhunt. Seeing the policemen, Pip feels a strange surge of worry for his convict.

As an infant Philip Pirrip was unable to pronounce either his first name or his last owing to his best, he called himself Pip. Now Pip, a young boy, is an orphan living in his sister's house in the marsh country in Southeast England.

One evening, Pip sits in the isolated village churchyard, staring at his parents' tombstones. Suddenly a horrific growling, dressed in rags and with his leg in chains, springs out from behind a gravestone and seizes Pip. This escaped convict questions Pip harshly and demands that Pip bring him food and file which he can saw away his leg irons.

Pip was ~~fright~~ frightened. He runs to the house. He shares these with his sister and her kindly husband, Mr Joe Gargery, a blacksmith. The boy stashes some pieces of bread and butter in one leg of his pants, but he is unable to get over quickly. It is Christmas Eve. Pip is forced to stir the holiday pudding all evening. His sister, whom he calls Mrs Joe, thunders about. She threatens Pip and Mr Joe with her cane. Next day early morning Pip sneaks down to the pantry where he steals some brandy (mistakenly refilling the bottle with tea water) and pork pie for the convict. He then sneaks to Joe's Smithy where he steals a file. Stealthily he heads back into the marshes to meet the convict.

Unfortunately, the first man he finds hiding in the marshes is actually a second different convict.
