

ECCLESIASTES

God is impartial. He doesn't make difference between good and evil. He gives life, gifts to both good and bad person.

Living better than the dead. Life will not come again. It is man who makes life better. Man knows that he will die one day.

Life is virtuous. Man who has life, leads a happy life. He should refrain from sinning. God gives man pleasure in life.

There is no life after death. It is not possible for man to work after his soul has been taken away from his body. Man should do the best he can.

Chance plays an important part in this world. It is not necessary what the strong may always win against the weak. Chance makes everything possible. The weak should be discouraged. They should put in the best and chance may make them victorious. With time everything perishes good and bad.

Man should remember God. He should not think of God when he is nearing death but even in his youth when he is comparatively free from sin. Man should think of God even during his days of pleasure.

Death puts end of all thing. Nothing is left behind. The memory of dead in the mind of living fades away. They cease to exist even in the mind of people. The body of man is made of dust. After death it goes back from where it comes. The soul of man flies back to God.
